The attendance was fair and the specula-tion was lively, with the odds all in favor of the pencillers. While the horses were at the post in the second race a thunderstorm made its appearance and caused the track to become sloppy.

come sloppy.

In the opening race Mattie Chun and Kenyon closed equal 'favorites,' but both were beaten by Imported Night Light, the third choice in the betting. Ronald was a slight favorite over Grand Prix for the second, but after a long delay Starter Cassidy dropped the flag, leaving Ronald at the post. Grand Prix had little difficulty in finishing in front of his field.

A lot of dogs started in the third race and Speedwell was selected as the favorite, a plunge in Banjo driving the latter's odds down from six to three. It was no race for Banjo, who won as he pleased by eight lengths. Agitation won the two-year-old event in handy lashion, Miss Doloris filly, the first choice, failing to negotiate the mud.

KANSAS CITY, July 6.—Results:

A case of some interest is now before Mgr

Satolli, and he is expected to give a decision in the course of a few weeks.

It seems that Rev. P. O'Farrell, formerly of the Trenton diocese, but now located in Kentucky, has entered a petition to be reinstated the Trenton diocese, but now located in kentucky, has entered a petition to be reinstated in the diocese for which he was ordained. Some years ago Father O'Farreil and Bishop O'Farreil, of Trenton, N. J., disagreed on several matters of ecclesiastical detail. The disagreement wound up by the bishop's ordering Father O'Farreil away for a vecacion. The priest got huffed at the bishop's attitude, and made a request for his exeat. This was given him, and now for years he has been voluntarily banished from the diocese.

The priest is a gentleman of more than ordinary attainments. He has been a voluminous contributor to the best periodical literature of the country. Besides being a parish priest, he has held various professional positions, and last year held the chair of philosophy and Christian doctrine in the large college of Gethsemane, Kentucky. The reverend gentleman in asking for a reinstatem in into the diocess of Trenton does it, it is stated, on the ground of justice.

Since Bishop O'Farreil's death, which occurred about two or three months ago, papers were made out by the priest covering the case and filed in the office of the legation. For the past two weeks the reverend elergyman has been stopping in Washington, expecting a dedecision in his case. The pseuliar feature about Father O'Farreil's affair is that the application for reinstatement was not made until the bishop's death.

Arabs Were So Fond of His Song, "A Dude

in Silk," That They Stole Him and Kept Him for Months. Harry Clark, the assistant stage manager at Albaugh's theater and the father of "Le Petite Freddy," is a veteran of the road, and a number of years ago had his own company of circus performers in Europe. A part of his circul, which consisted of four years and the night to feasting and reveiry for forty days.

On these occasions Bedouins from the burning sands of the desert would come into Damascus and enter into the general sport. There being no hotel in the town, Mr. Clark had his own house, to which he brought several of the chiefs of the various Arab tribes. His little boy Freedy was then 4 years old, but he sang and danced like a veteran.

One little song which was especially pleasing to the Bedouins was that called "Biffa Hinda," which translated means "Slik from Instia," or in our language "A Dude in Slik." Little Freedy sang this song in the Turkish language, and made a deended impression upon the Arab chieftains. Mr. Clark received many offers of money for the boy, but of course refused to entertain any such propositions.

subsequently intimated that a Bedouin the had taken the loy into the street and that was the last he had seen of him. The local lice were pressed into service, and a use to house search inaugurated. Nothing was, however, learned of the boy's where-Then Mr. Clark telegraphed the American was, however, learned of the boy's whereabouts.

Then Mr. Clark telegraphed the American consul general, Robeson, at Beirut, who immediately wired to the consul at Damascus to use every effort to discover the whereabouts of the child, and in the meantime give protection to Mr. Clark and his family. As a result of this telegram Turkish police mounted on camels were sent into the desert, which was secured for days without discovering anything.

About three months after little Freddy disappeared, while his father was preparing the pantomime in the circus, a cunned sent word to the unhappy father that the boy was in the garden. He then disappeared. Mr. Clark went into the audience and discovered his little boy seated behind some Turkish officials, crying bitterly.

Upon being questioned little Freddy said that the Ara's had taken him "way out in the sand," where they had kept him a prisoner. They fed him on goat's milk and chicken, and passed him around from tribe to tribe, where they compelled him to sing his "Bifta Hinda." The child was a shrewd one, and at last relused to sing unless he was returned to his parents.

The chase was then growing hot, and in order to avoid complications some of the tribe brought the boy into Damascus and delivered him to a black man on Straight street, which is mentioned by St. Pani in his Epistle to the Romans. A few days afterward word was brought to Mr. Clark that unless he delivered a certain sum of money to a money changer then in Damascus the boy would be taken from him again and either kept in confinement forever or be killed.

"Being a stranger in a strange land," adds Mr. Clark, "I was compelled to disgorge what would be equivalent to $3,000 in our money. This together with the $5,000 I spent in scarching for my boy made the adventure rather costly, and after that I was very careful to keep Froddy out of sight when there were any strangers about. Although the Arnis treated the child respectfully, he was permitted to see things which would make your blood car, it, and it was
